

Amen Jaffer is Assistant Professor of Sociology at the Lahore University of Management Sciences (LUMS). He is trained in urban ethnography with a PhD in Sociology from the New School for Social Research. Currently, he is working on two projects. One is a comparative ethnography of urban citizenship in low-income neighborhoods of Lahore which looks at poor residents' engagements with the infrastructures of their neighborhoods as acts of creating political communities. The other project is a book manuscript that explores the sociability of diverse communities in the space of Sufi shrines in South Asia. He argues that the unique experience of time in this religious institution allows for the emergence of a particular sociability that cuts across caste, religion, and to an extent, class divides in South Asian society.
