

Veronica Toste is assistant professor at the Social Sciences Department, Institute of Humanities and Philosophy, Fluminense Federal University. She has a PhD in Sociology (2014) from the Institute for Social and Political Studies (IESP/Uerj) and her dissertation focused on the identities and experiences of Brazilians who identify as pardos (brown) and the intersectionalities of this racialized identity with class and gender. The dissertation was recently published as a book entitled Tão longe, tão perto: identidades, discriminação e estereótipos de pretos e pardos no Brasil (Mauad, 2016). Most of her work has focused on issues related to gender, race and affirmative action policies mostly in Brazil but also from a comparative and transnational perspective. She is currently a researcher at the Sexuality and Gender Studies Group (UFRJ) and at the Global Race Project (Agence National de la Recherche).
